A VISIT TO ST. PETER'S, ROME.

ROME, February 15.
ED. JOURNAL.—It was our fourth day in the Imperial City, and we had visited the Forum, Coliseum, Baths of Caracalla, Tarpeian Rock, Palace of the Caesars, Capitoline Hill and Museum, museums and galleries of the Vatican, and other minor attractions of this most interesting city of the world. We had studied with earnest attention Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment" in the Sixtine Chapel, a vast work, sixty-four feet in width. It is in this chapel that most of the solemnities at which the Pope officiates in person, take place. We had gazed with rapture upon Raphael's "Transfiguration," the master's last and greatest work; with delight upon Guido Belotti's "Aurora," and with admiration upon those matchless marvels of ancient art, the "Apollo Belvedere," "Laocoön and Sons," and the "Dying Gladiator." We had crossed and recrossed old historic Tiber; descended to the deepest depths of the Mamertine Prison, the last abode of St. Peter before his execution by the infamous Nero; traversed the beautiful grounds of the lofty Pincio, from the topmost terrace of which we beheld a beautiful panorama of modern Rome; hurriedly visited some of the most important of the innumerable churches of this city of churches, including the internally magnificent and costly St. Paul's. We had not forgotten

ST. PETER'S.

Although we had several times been there, yet it was again exercising its magnetic power, and we were, naturally enough, again crossing the bridge of St. Angelo en route for it. Just before us towered the castle of the same name, surmounted by its colossal of Montelupo, and connected with the Vatican by a covered way. A few moments more and we were entering the large elliptical square of St. Peter. It is enclosed on two sides by imposing colonades, consisting of a series of four doric columns, both containing in all 284. On the roofs of these colonades are 12th statues of saints. In the centre of the square rises the great obelisk of HELIOPOLIS, curiosus as the only monument of its kind in the city which has not, at some time, been overthrown. At the sides, between the obelisk and the colonades, are two handsome fountains, 45 feet in height, throwing a profuse stream much higher. The effect is imposing, and forms a fitting approach to the largest and most imposing church in the world. At the far end, 1100 feet distant, rises facade of the church itself, with its massive columns, its five entrances, and over all its massive balustrade, surmounted by statues of the Saviour and the Apostles, each 10 feet in height. Over the central of these five entrances in the Loggia or Balcony, in which the new

POPE IS CROWNED, And from which he imparts his benediction at Easter, to the concourse assembled in the square below (or rather he did so before the occupation of the city by the Italian troops). These entrances are approached by an easy flight of very wide steps. The exterior does not present so massive an appearance as one is led to expect from the magnitude of its dimensions. This is owing to the immensity of its surroundings. Entering the portico, with its magnificent ceiling decorations of stucco work, and equestrian statues of Constantine and Charlemagne at far as the dome, are four colossal pillars; above these extends a rich entablature, which bears the arches extending from pillar to pillar, and the gorgeously coffered and gilded vaulting of the ceiling. By the fourth pillar, on the right, is

THE OLD STATUE Of St. Peter, in bronze, seated on a throne of white marble and under a rich canopy. The right foot projects somewhat, and a part of it and the big toe are much worn by the kisses of worshippers. Standing here and surveying the vast dimensions and rich finish, one receives a lasting impression of its magnificence and impressiveness. Its shape, like most of the churches of the same denomination, is that of a cross, formed by a nave, flanked on each side by aisles, and crossed at the dome by a transept. Flanking these aisles are chapels, one of which is the celebrated Gregorian, erected under Gregory XIII., from designs by Michael Angelo. Here on the Sabbath previous, we had attended vespers, celebrated by the male choir by the Pope, said to be the finest in Europe. The south transept was partitioned off for the use of the ECUMENICAL COUNCIL, And has not been altered since. The north contains altars and confessionals for eleven different languages. Near the corner of this transept and the north aisle, is the entrance to the sacristy and treasury. Here, a few days before, we had been shown the papal robes and jewels in countless number and magnificence. Among them was the crown and the great ring of St. Peter. The dome is supported on four huge buttresses, 234 feet in circumference; the niches in the lower part of which are occupied by statues 10 feet in height; above them are the four loggie by Bernini, where the great relics are exhibited on high festivals. Above these are four mosaics of the Evangelists, of great dimensions. The ribs of the vaulting of the dome are adorned with gilded stucco; between them are four series of mosaics. Beneath the dome rises the imposing canopy, with its four

RICHLY GILDED COLUMNS, Surmounted by a cross. Underneath it is the High Altar, at which the Pope only reads mass on high festivals. It stands directly over the Tomb of St. Peter. Just in front is the confessio, surrounded by its 89 ever burning lamps. We had descended to it the day previous, by the double marble stair, and peered through the gilded door at the sarcophagus, said to contain the remains of the Apostle. Between the stairs is a fine statue of Pius VI. in the attitude of prayer, by Canova. In the tribune, at the end of the nave, is the bronze Cathedra Petri by Bernini, said to contain the ancient wooden episcopal chair of St. Peter. The church contains few paintings of note, but many fine copies, in mosaics, of the most celebrated. We now directed our steps towards the starway leading to the roof, directed by our guide, who had made all necessary arrangements the day previous. Directly we began to ascend a circular flight of easy steps, 142 in number, to the roof. On the way the walls were lined with a large number of memorial tablets to royal personages who had performed the ascent. On the roof, which is covered with flagstones like a court yard, were the houses of the workmen and custodians. We also more closely examined the colossal statuary which adorns the facade, and found that which appeared to so much advantage 165 feet below, was very rough workmanship indeed. The view from this point is good, but we gave it little attention, for we knew a much finer one awaited us from the cupola or lantern, which sat like a crown on the top of the huge dome, 308 feet above us. We now walked around the inner and lower gallery of the dome, from which we enjoyed a splendid view of the interior. Below—the

HIGH ALTAR CANOPY. The cross of which, although as high as most of our church steeples, was 70 feet below us; the dimly burning lamps of the confessio; the sittings of the Ecumenical Council, for from our lofty position, we could look over the partition, and with the aid of our glasses note the arrangement beautiful proportions, rose the gilded dome, rich in mosaics; far above all, where the beauty lines met, the light of day was streaming in through the lantern. I then and there received an impression of the vast magnitude of this edifice which I shall never forget. Perhaps I may convey a part of it to the reader by giving some dimensions. Total length externally, 696 feet; length of transept externally, 480 feet; height of nave and transept, from pavement to ceiling, 150 feet; height of dome from pavement to summit of cross, 435 feet; circumference of dome, 630 feet; square feet of covered surface, 212,321. It contains 30 altars and 148 columns. It is somewhat humiliating to English travelers when they learn, for the first time, that St. Paul's, the pride of London, can be set up, dome and all, inside of St. Peter's, and room to spare. We now ascended to the lantern by a flight of stairs between the external and the internal walls of the dome. Once there we felt more than repaid by the MAGNIFICENT PANORAMA Unfolded to us. Rome and its surroundings, the Tiber and its windings, and nearer, the gardens and large buildings of the Vatican; immediately below us the roof of the church with its many domes and buildings; nearer still the dome itself, bound with its huge bands of iron by which it was strengthened in the eighteenth century when threatening fissures began to appear. A part of us now ascended into the upper ball, which affords no view, but is the highest accessible point. The ascent was by a narrow and steep ladder, but some of the ladies, true to their past record and achievements made it, after the men had pioneered the way. This ball, which appears from the square about a foot in diameter, proved to be nine feet. We now retraced our steps and passed into the Vatican Sculpture Gallery. My mind reverted to the splendid manscule I had seen in the church of St. Croce, in Florence, of the architect and often time builder of this church, and I thought how much more fitting a monument to him is the structure itself. Architect, sculptor, artist, builder, and excelsior in all—Michael Angelo.

Curious Facts Concerning Brain Injuries. Delicate as the organization of the brain must be, it is surprising to read of the hard knocks it can bear, but even to its advantage. One man who lost his brain, through suppuration of the skull, preserved his intellectual faculties to the day of his death; and the brains of soldiers have been known to carry bullets without apparent inconvenience, and to undergo operation for the extraction of foreign bodies without loss of power. A physician, who was afflicted with an abnormal cerebral growth which pressed upon the cavities of the brain, so as to paralyze one side of his body, and render him speechless, retaining possession of his reasoning and calculating powers until he died. One of three brothers, all idiots, after receiving a severe blow on the head, gained his senses, and lived to be a clever barrister. A stable boy of dull capacity, and subject to fits, had his wits sharpened by the kick of a horse, which necessitated the abstraction of a portion of his brain; and Pope Clement VI. owed the improvement of his memory to a slight concussion of the brain. On the other hand, it is a fact that the brains of persons with thoroughly disordered minds as a rule present no abnormal condition after death, which is not to be wondered at when it is found that symptoms of a disordered brain are frequently produced by a very slight alteration in the constitution of blood.

Bowing Alfalfa.

One of the main requirements to the success of an alfalfa crop is to do the seeding properly, and to do this it must be borne in mind that the seed cannot bear deep covering. A short-tooth harrow may be used, but the safer plan is to harrow the ground before sowing, and then drag the seed in with a brush. This will give it ample depth of covering, and in a few days it will make its appearance through the ground. No better season has ever been presented for sowing ground that is inclined to be dry than the present. Alfalfa will grow on tolerably dry soil after it has once a start, the roots naturally running to the depth that will insure moisture. If farmers desire a few acres of pasture where in ordinary seasons it would be necessary to irrigate for the first year or two they

MODOC NEWS.—Yesterday we met a gentleman from the country north of us from whom we learned the following items of interest:

Snow lies a foot deep in Surprise Valley, thus preventing the farmers from getting in their crops.

Times are very dull in that county at present; little or no money circulating.

The mail route is still closed—the snow being very deep on the mountains. All communication with the outside world being carried on by the direct route.

Several of the military officers and other prominent gentlemen from that section are in Reno on business and will remain here until the weather is settled out there.

There are about fifty Warm Spring Indians, one hundred Hot Spring and ten or a dozen Modocs in the neighborhood of Surprise Valley.

Fort Bidwell now has 200 soldiers garrisoned in it.

OUT FOR PRACTICE.—A friendly test of the merits of our hand and steam engines was made yesterday. The hand engine claims "first water," though the steamer had many minutes the start. It will be the steamer's turn next. We like to see this friendly rivalry.

RETURNED.—Manager Webster, of the Consolidated Poe, returned from San Francisco yesterday morning. His visit to the Bay resulted in much good financially and otherwise for his company. Give Webster a show and in sixty days the company won't owe a quarter of a dollar.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.—The regular quarterly meeting of the Board of County Commissioners will take place in the Court house to-morrow, at which time the tax for the present fiscal year will be levied and the audited outstanding accounts against the county allowed.

PYRAMID LAKE.—Elsewhere will be found an interesting article about Pyramid Lake. It is from the pen of G. Lemon, and was by him contributed to the San Francisco Rural Press. The notes were gathered by him while out on a botanical excursion.

WANT TO KNOW.—Judge Webster says he was besieged by persons at the Bay, anxious about our Peavine mines and the Steamboat discoveries. He may be sure he spoke well of the mineral resources of Washoe county.

THE "JUBILEES."

As the Tennessee Jubilee Singers will sing at the Opera House on Thursday night, and they created such an interest on the occasion of their first appearance here, we publish all we know about them. The troupe is mainly composed of emancipated slaves. They performed in the East and in England with great success, and won golden opinions from such men as Mr. Gladstone, the Rev. Newman Hall and George Macdonald, the novelist. The latter says of the Jubilee Singers: "There is something inexpressibly touching in their wonderfully sweet, round, bell-like voices, in the way in which they sing—so artless in its art, yet so consummate in expression—and in the mingling of the pathetic with the unconscious comic in the rude hymns, shot here and there with a genuine thread of poetry."

The following are the principal members of the Company:

Henry Hunly, the basso, was prior to and during the war, a slave of John Morgan, the noted cavalry raider, and worked at his master's hemp factory, at Knoxville.

John T. Henderson, whose smooth, sweet tenor voice, and admirable handling of the solo parts, gives him a prominent position in the troupe, is a native of Lexington, where he has resided for a number of years with his mother and sisters. The mother accompanies her son and her two daughters, Anna and Lulu, in the capacity of matron of the class.

Anna Henderson, the eldest sister of John, is the only trained musician in the class.

Lulu, her little sister, a child of fifteen years, is a promising little singer, and her accuracy of ear and instinctive appreciation of correct harmony are wonderful.

Frank Grimes, the baritone of the troupe, was a slave in New Orleans.

Albert Byrd is highly gifted as tenor. He is a native of Lexington, Kentucky, and worked as a slave till the war.

Miss Delia Payne, the second alto, is a native of Louisiana, having been born and raised on a plantation there.

Kitty Byrd, alto singer, is the wife of Albert Byrd, mentioned above.

Miss Jennie Mackey, the soprano, passed her childhood in slavery, like the rest.

Their programme comprises one hundred airs, many of them entirely new to a white audience and given with that sweetness and expression for which colored vocalists are so remarkable.

THE SPRING FASHIONS.

The ladies are waiting to learn of Spring fashions, and to prepare for the advent of Summer. The windows of our leading dry goods houses have a tempting display of fabrics, and a visit to their counters reveals many attractive novelties. The fancy for combinations of plaids and stripes, with a corresponding plain color, still continues, extending to the new cambrics and percales, which are unusually pretty. Perhaps the prettiest of all these combinations is that of plain silks or cashmere with the same color in brocade—a centennial revival which bids fair to be very popular. These brocades are found in both silk and worsted. As yet there is no decided change in the fashions; clinging skirts, with long overdress and round basque are still worn, though the side pleating so long used in giving place to bias flounces similar to those worn three or four years since. Plaids and checks of all sizes and colors, are found, from the fresh and pretty fifteen cent calico to the more dressy silk. Hats show a variety of shapes—the newest having broader brims and higher crowns than the Winter styles, but trimmed with the same profusion of flowers, feathers and lace, which has of late prevailed, and jauntily turned up in front or on one side to suit the face and form of the wearer. The new creamy and ivory tints are seen in everything. Ties, ribbons, gloves, parasols, all come in these delicate shades, and the prettiest Spring hats are fine chips of these tints with ostrich plumes to match. White lace is hardly seen, having given place to ties, scarfs and ruffles of the large meshed ivory lined fabric, more becoming to most complexions than the purer white. A Spring hat is not complete without this new lace forms a portion of the garniture.
